DOYLE ANNOUNCES CREATION OF MONROE COUNTY DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

New Economic Development Agency will Coordinate Public Job Creation Efforts

County Executive Jack Doyle, joined by officials from a number of public agencies, today announced the creation of a new economic development agency that will coordinate public economic development efforts. The Monroe County Development Corporation (MCDC) will bring together the services, programs and infrastructure offered by public agencies to encourage job creation and economic expansion in our community.

“MCDC will help us bring our public resources to the table in a more coherent and coordinated way to attract employers and encourage economic expansion here in Monroe County,” said Doyle. “Creating jobs is a team effort and I am very proud of the team we have assembled here today.”

Doyle pointed out that the new agency would complement the private sector development efforts being promoted by the Greater Rochester Enterprise (GRE). “MCDC will make it easier for potential employers to access the full array of programs, services, and infrastructure available here in Monroe County,” said Doyle. “Through MCDC, we can better coordinate our public resources with the GRE’s efforts to promote our community.”

In his State of the County Address in May of this year, Doyle made economic development the top priority of his administration and pressed for improved coordination of economic development efforts to encourage job creation.

Doyle announced that Rocco DiGiovanni has stepped down from his position as Director of the Monroe County Department of Planning and Economic Development to head the organization.
